Comedy central roast of justin bieber full show

Keep up with the latest daily buzz with the BuzzFeed Daily newsletter! Last week, Vogue debuted its March cover featuring our favorite newlyweds Justin Bieber, 24, and Hailey Baldwin, 22. The corresponding profile, Rob Haskell, is fascinating and sad. In it, Bieber talks about his depression, and how fame and family have contributed to it in the last few years, and he also, of course, waxes poetic about how he loves Baldwin, his baby boo. Baldwin seems all-in, despite Bieber's problems, though he says Haskell, Marriage is very difficult. That's a sentence you should lead with. It's really effing hard. Both say they are still working on planning a formal wedding. If you haven't read it yet, what are you doing? Take 15 minutes and meet me here. This week, the tabloid picked up the story, and sources are talking about what Bieber is doing to combat his depression. According to People, he was struggling a little bit, but it had nothing to do with Hailey. Two sources confirmed to the tabloid that Bieber is going to therapy, which seems to be good. A source told Us Weekly that he is not in rehab, but he is going to several doctors. E! News reported yesterday that Bieber is seeking all the help he can get and leaning on Baldwin and his pastor for support. Which pastor? If I had a guess I would say it's Judah Smith, from Churchome in Seattle, who was quoted in the Vogue story. Smith has been a Bieber minister since he was a young teenager, and he was the first church leader to bring a pop star into the evangelical scene. You may remember him as the pastor Bieber and Selena Gomez visited in Seattle during their brief meeting before Bieber got together with Baldwin. By the way, how's Gomez? She just appeared on Instagram after dealing with her own health issues this fall. She's still involved in the evangelical scene - Gomez was in Cabo to celebrate her hillsong friend Courtney Barry's farewell last week - but it's possible to avoid Bieber and Baldwin. In lighter news: Jennifer Aniston turns 50 on Monday. The big headline from her party at the Sunset Tower Hotel last weekend is that Brad Pitt was there. According to People, Aniston didn't really pay any special attention to Brad. They hugged and chatted for a while, but Jen was busy making sure all her other guests had an amazing time. So they're not back together and have a miracle baby - yet. There were plenty of other guests: Gwyneth Paltrow, Kate Hudson, Ellen DeGeneres, Demi Moore, George and Amal Clooney, Katy Perry and Orlando Bloom, BARBRA STREISAND, Robert Downey Jr., Courtney Cox, and Keith Richards were all there. So did another of Aniston's ex, John Mayer, who also dated Perry. Most importantly, Reese Witherspoon attended, and she had a great time: Do you remember Aniston's birthday last year? She had a quiet, girly celebration with Cox and friends Malibu, while her then husband Justin Theroux attended Fashion. in New York. That's when people started to wonder what was going on with their marriage, and a week later they announced in a joint statement that they were breaking up. You know what happened next: Theroux went on a nervous paparazzi tour in New York, hung out with people like Petra Collins and Aubrey Plaza, and wore lots of bodies. Aniston, meanwhile, was sticking to her routine in L.A. But her ex-husband appears to be after the drama: Theroux wished Aniston a happy birthday on Monday. And he kept busy in New York during the weekend's big Aniston party, attending - you guessed it - a series of Fashion Week events. Kylie Jenner and Travis Scott's 1-year-old daughter Stormi Webster also celebrated her birthday this weekend with a very expensive party in LA. And she got a puppy! It's a chihuahua/dachshund mix called Wesley, and he's very cute, and I'm not just saying that because he looks a lot like my dog: Photo: kyliejenner/Instagram This new addition, however, prompted fans to ask Jenner what happened to her other dogs, not her Italian hound, Norman. Jenner's response: what's wrong with I think something happened to my Norman? I don't post my dogs that much, but that doesn't mean they aren't much apart of my life anymore. - Kylie Jenner (@KylieJenner) February 12, 2019 What's ridiculous to say about a pet. It's still part of my life. In other Kardashian news, People this morning reported that Khloé Kardashian's relationship with Tristan Thompson may finally be coming to an end. Khloé and Pravda are happy in Los Angeles. They spend very little time in Cleveland, where Tristan is, a source told the tabloid. She's very much acting like a single mom. Tuned. One small blessing from this week: Jemima Kirke admits to faking her British accent. And here's an interesting blind item from this week's Take Care of Enty on Crazy Days and Nights: This alliterate former singer turned actress made her publicist tell a certain morning talk show that she doesn't share TV time with any of her co-stars. She was glad she did the interview, but she would come alone or not at all. Send me your guesses! Finally, I'll leave you with this photo of Kristen Stewart and her new-ish stylist girlfriend, Sara Dinkin, leaving a spa in LA on Sunday. I hope you all spend some quality time with your valentines this week! Photo: GEDU, SALA/Terma, SL/BACKGRID Thanks so much for the gossip. Update: Police reports are usually reliable-if you can't trust cops who you can trust?-but it seems miami beach pd may have exaggerated Justin Bieber's activities last week, and he probably wasn't racing at all. But our place stands in connection with operating a vehicle after consuming any amount of alcohol or drugs, and we still believe Bieber must learn to drive. We'd still like to teach him. Dear Justin, it came to our attention here on the car and driver that you were recently caught street racing Lamborghini Gallardo Spyder and arrested on charges of DUI, driving on expired license, and resisting arrest. You've been in automotive trouble before, which upset the crap out of your neighbors by tearing through your fancy gated community warp speed in your Chrome Fisker Karma, batman-logoed Cadillac CTS-V coupe, and whatever other aesthetically perverted cars you own. It's not the so-called racing that bothers us the most-be confident on its own, such an act is dangerous at best and deadly at worst, even at 60mph you're told to make travel when the cops stop you-it's the fact that you were allegedly drunk and high while doing so. While drag racing on a residential street shows terrible disrespect for the property and lives of others, doing so, police say, while under the influence of marijuana, alcohol and prescription drugs it takes its reputation for irresponsible behavior into a whole new stratosphere. So we're proposing a challenge: a race on the road of your choice, a day that won't interfere with any of your pending meetings with the Florida justice system. You must learn respect for the life and property of your fellow citizens and for the abilities of the cars you own. Think about that if you find yourself sneezing at Justin Bieber on the April cover of Men's Health. We're not saying you're just like Justin Bieber. But maybe you won't judge so quickly. If you've ever been young, you've made mistakes. You've done things you regret. The only difference: No one was watching. But don't take our word for it.
